Youth and Community Voices Educator Workshop Series

The Educational Video Center (EVC) has been working with NYC youth for over 35 years to produce documentary films on topics such as youth depression; gender and body image; bullying; drug and alcohol abuse; juvenile justice and police-youth relations. EVC films have proven to be particularly effective in schools because they are produced by NYC youth, who bring their faces, voices and insider’s perspective into classrooms to spark discussion and learning. In collaboration with NYU’s Steinhardt School of Culture, Education and Human Development’s Partnership Schools Program, this workshop series provides participants with tools and techniques to employ culturally responsive teaching practices that meet the diverse needs of their students. This workshop will focus on critical themes or problems in students’ lives and will include discussions of EVC films with experts in the field and EVC youth producers. This workshop will be dedicated to developing student-led lessons and activities to be implemented at participants’ schools. As participants are guided through some of the journaling, active viewing and discussion activities, they will experience the program just as their students will, leaving the workshops fully prepared to facilitate the activities and projects with their students.

COURSE DATES: July 6th - 10th, 10am-3pm

REGISTRATION
Registration for the Youth and Community Voices educator workshop series is currently open. All participants must register directly with Educational Video Center by emailing Mary Grueser at mgrueser@evc.org
Space is limited to 20 participants. The registration and materials fee is $125 payable by check to Educational Video Center.

LOCATION: Online

CTLE hours are available for this workshop. If you have any questions about the workshop series, contact Mary Grueser at mgrueser@evc.org or via phone, 212-465-9366 ext.103.